

Press Release

Wiseducators

Education with a flare—Wiseducators, a business for your community

11/24/2007

Fredericksburg, VA—An argument could be made that this collection of literature is, in a sense, improperly titled. In a literal sense, it is in fact, a reflection on the experiences of a young Black man with a “middle class” up-bringing.

A person who is on a quest to find his or her worthwhile mate, in spite of insecurity, dishonesty, and lack of trust which plagues both men and women can be located in the pages of his often ambiguous messages about the country and relationships.

In REFLECTIONS OF A CONFUSED MIDDLE CLASS BLACK YOUTH, author Eugene Williams presents a captivating poetry book which includes topics such as children, parenting, and women. Williams exposes his readers to many abstract poems, and includes a short story that is captivating to all single parents and their children.

About the Author

Miami native Eugene Williams, Jr. is an educator who works in the Central Virginia area assisting students with educational needs and is a political free-lance writer for several newspapers. His first book, The “Raisin-in-Milk” Syndrome a survival guide for students at predominantly white colleges and universities was self-published, and I Am The Darker Brother published by Publish America, LLP is his most recent book. Is Bill Cosby Right or Is Eric Dyson Crazy is in manuscript form.

Reflections of a Confused Middle Class Black Youth

By Eugene Williams, Jr.

$10.00 Paperback

63 pages

Comptex Associates, Self-Published, May 1996

ISBN-10: 0911849033

ISBN-13: 978-0911849035

###